CHAPTER XIII QUARRELLING with the man you have promised to marry is bad business at best; when the object of that quarrel is a man who has no time for pretty ladies, the thing becomes an absurdity. You sleep on it and wake with the taste of regret on your lips. Chloe quarrelled, Chloe slept, and seven hours later Chloe woke to the shrill clamor of the telephone just outside her door. Is it for me, chere ptite she called quickly, and then relaxed and waited, dark hair flowing over her pillow, dark eyes thoughtful. From the hall her mothers voice replied to her. Mrs. Malone had never lost the soft Gallic cadences of her youth. Chloe, it is Dan. So I suppose, said Chloe grimly to herself. She got out of bed, slipped her feet into sandals, drew on a faded pink kimono that had once been vivid, and went out of the room. Her face was unsmiling when she picked up the receiver, but with the first word that sang against her ear she flushed and softened. Sorry said Dan Kinloch at the other end of the wire. Youre sorry she repeated incredulously. No, you are. I knew you would be. Oh! Yes, I am. Is that what you wanted To begin with. Youre still going to marry me, arent you Dont be absurd. Even if I dont do things myself and cant understand a man who does Please, Dan-- Even if...
