Adams, D.D.)T is not without significance that when we leave behind all the years we have known and come to the boundary of another portion of our life we call it a new year. It is a fresh, untrodden section of our days. It holds in itself unrevealed possibilities. We move out into its experiences with a feeling of expectancy. We are like explorers, making our journey, day after day, into an unknown region. When we mount a hill, we cannot tell what view will open upon us in the valley beyond. In the morning, we do not know where our tent...
